Ethan A. Shippen specialises in international trade and commercial contracts, primarily with an emphasis on supply chain services. He advises a vast range of actors within compliance with sanctions and export controls, including dual-use, and also has a solid track record pertaining to mergers and acquisitions.

Ethan advises on both Danish and EU-based legislation and covers various aspects of both domestic and international trade. A natural communicator, he combines a strong sense of commercial insight with well-rounded legal assessments and thus provides to-the-point recommendations.

Prior to joining Kromann Reumert in 2019, he also has experience from the public sector, including within the judiciaries as well as having served as a university lecturer (international trade law/CISG and criminal law, respectively). Today, he combines his role at Kromann Reumert with the function as an ad hoc external lecturer via some of our partners.
